Top US University Colleges Not In The Ivy League

Although attending an Ivy League school can significantly boost a student's resume, many schools are equal – or better – in their offerings and academic prowess.

Many schools are often mistaken as Ivy League schools, including Duke, Northwestern, Vanderbilt, University of Chicago, and several more.

Why are these schools not in the Ivy League? For one, it actually has nothing to do with the quality of the school. Rather, the Ivy League is simply an athletic conference comprised of eight schools established in the 20th century.

Indeed, the Ivy League is renowned for being one of the most prominent university networks in the United States. At the same time, many top-tier universities don't belong to the Ivy League. These schools are nevertheless home to compelling degree programs, accomplished faculty, and the abundant resources students expect from a world-class institute of higher education.

PwC Higher Apprenticeship Program

The PwC Higher Apprenticeship Program has another cohort coming in Jan-Feb 2023. We are investing in nurturing and developing young employees whilst they continue to grow, connect and create opportunities here at PwC.

The Higher Apprenticeship Program offers an alternative option to university for individuals who are primarily school leavers. This program enables them to combine full time work and study towards qualifications in Information Technology via an Australian Government endorsed Vocational Education & Training (VET) contract.

We believe in reimagining the possible and university is not the only option anymore. The work we do is changing and we need more employees with technical & practical capabilities. In a tight talent market we want to continue to explore alternative talent markets and help drive our employment growth across Australia.

At PwC we bridge the gap between education and skills and give the many high-performing and motivated young people coming into our workforce the opportunity to learn and thrive in professional services without a degree.
